Articulation – a process that will allow courses, or blocks of courses, to substitute/transfer in total for other courses or blocks of courses within programs within a given sequence of courses. The term can also mean “synonymous with” or “comparable to” (when referring to course content)

   It is a term that is widely used (i.e. in music [articulation marks], in zoology [articulated skeleton—referring to bone sequence], in speech [to orally convey an idea or concept well]).
In education [used, since the 1960s to refer to a number of scenarios including, but not limited to course substitution, dual enrollment, etc.] and often misunderstood. In most postsecondary uses, the term refers to courses (or blocks of courses within programs) (Ex. The Louisiana Board of Regents General Education Articulation Matrix provides an example of various English, mathematics, science, etc. courses which are considered “comparable enough” to one another to be accepted in substitution of course work offered by other institutions of Postsecondary Education in Louisiana.)

Course comparability can be guided by comparisons of basic course syllabi and by checking the course content/ programmatic classification as described within the taxonomy provided by the Classification of Instructional Programs 2000 (USDE:OERI).

In postsecondary education the term can refer to either horizontal or vertical articulation but should not be confused with Spiraled Curriculum. (See Horizontal Articulation, Vertical Articulation, Dual Enrollment , Statewide Articulation, and Spiral Curriculum.).

Articulation (Atypical) - See entry for Atypical Transfer/ Articulation.

Assessment – a term meaning to “sit beside” and lead to insight and improvement. (AAC&U)

Assessment: a non-judgmental analysis that includes several common types to include:

- Direct Assessment of Learning – gathers evidence, based on student performance, which demonstrates the learning itself. Can be value added, related to standards, qualitative or quantitative, embedded or not, using local or external criteria. Examples: most classroom testing for grades is direct assessment (in this instance within the confines of a course), as is the evaluation of a research paper in terms of the discriminating use of sources. The latter example could assess learning accomplished within a single course or, if part of a senior requirement, could also assess cumulative learning.

- Embedded – a means of gathering information about student learning that is built into and a natural part of the teaching-learning process. Embedded Assessments often use, for assessment purposes, classroom assignments that are evaluated to assign students a grade. Can assess individual student performance or aggregate the information to provide information about the course or program; can be formative or summative, quantitative or qualitative. Example: as part of a course, expecting each senior to complete a research paper that is graded for content and style, but is also assessed for advanced ability to locate and evaluate Web-based information (as part of a college-wide outcome to demonstrate information literacy).

- External – use of criteria (rubric) or an instrument developed by an individual or organization outside of the organizational structure of the one being assessed. Usually summative, quantitative, and often high-stakes (see High Stakes Assessment). Example: GRE exams.

- For Accountability – assessment of some unit (could be a department, program or entire institution) to satisfy stakeholders external to the unit itself. Results are often compared across units. It is always summative. Example: to retain state approval, the achievement of a 90 percent pass rate or better on teacher certification tests by graduates of a school of education.
For Improvement – assessment that feeds directly, and often immediately, back into revising the course, program or institution to improve results (i.e. student learning). It can be formative or summative (see “Formative assessment” for an example).

Formative – the gathering of information about student learning. During the progression of a course or program it is usually repeatedly--to improve the learning of those students. Example: reading the first lab reports of a class to assess whether some or all students in the group need a lesson on how to make them succinct and informative.

“High Stakes” – the decision to use the results of assessment to set a hurdle that needs to be cleared for completing a program of study, receiving certification, or moving to the next level. Most often the assessment so used is externally developed, based on set standards, carried out in a secure testing situation, and administered at a single point in time. Examples: at the secondary school level, statewide exams required for graduation; in postgraduate education, the bar exam.

Indirect Assessment of Learning – gathers reflection about the learning or secondary evidence of its existence. Example: a student survey about whether a course or program helped develop a greater sensitivity to issues of diversity.

Individual – uses the individual student, and his/her learning, as the level of analysis. Can be quantitative or qualitative, formative or summative, standards-based or value added, and used for improvement. Would need to be aggregated if used for accountability purposes. Examples: improvement in student knowledge of a subject during a single course; improved ability of a student to build cogent arguments over the course of an undergraduate career.

Institutional – uses the institution as the level of analysis. Can be quantitative or qualitative, formative or summative, standards-based or value added, and used for improvement or for accountability. Ideally institution-wide goals and objectives would serve as a basis for the assessment. Example: how well students across the institution can work in multi-cultural teams as sophomores and seniors.

Local – means and methods that are developed by an institution’s faculty based on their teaching approaches, students, and learning goals. Can fall into any of the definitions here except “external assessment,” for which it is an antonym. Example: one college’s use of nursing students’ writing about the “universal precautions” at multiple points in their undergraduate program as an assessment of the development of writing competence.

Performance-utilizes testing and requires that the candidate perform the skills being tested or Create an original answer or solution to a problem orally or in writing. Types of performance-based assessment include:

- Project-hands-on type of assessment in which a student performs a real-life replication of a project that might be found/ required in a workplace. A faculty member or judge observes the student’s progress with predetermined assessment criteria in mind (ex. create an information packet for senior citizens regarding health care costs, options, and insurance overages and services for home health care.)

- Portfolio-student documents the attainment of skills for each assessment standards that have been established. The Louisiana redesigned teacher preparation is entirely based upon an electronic portfolio known as PASS-PORT. (ex. portfolios contain proof of a students completion of each level of specific assessment standards).
Competitions - settings that students to demonstrate their skills in a realistic situation. (ex. SKILLS-USA Champion program uses industry standards for designing contests and evaluating student performance in order to keep instructional programs current and drive student achievement upward.).

Program – uses the department or program as the level of analysis. Can be quantitative or qualitative, formative or summative, standards-based or value added, and used for improvement for accountability. Ideally program goals and objectives would serve as a basis for the assessment. Example: how sophisticated a close reading of texts senior English majors can accomplish (if used to determine value added, would be compared to the ability of newly declared majors).

Qualitative – collects data that does not lend itself to quantitative methods but rather to more subjective and interpretive criteria (see the first example under “Standards”).

Quantitative – collects data that can be analyzed using operational definitions and empirical data (see “For Accountability” for an example).

Summative – term referring to the gathering of information at the conclusion of a course, program, or undergraduate career to improve learning or to meet accountability demands. When used for improvement, impacts the next cohort of students taking the course or program. Examples: examining student final exams in a course to see if certain specific areas of the curriculum were understood less well than others; analyzing senior projects for the ability to integrate across disciplines.

Hence, if a student earned...
A for 1 3-semester credit course: $1 \times 4 \times 3 = 12$
C for 2 3-semester credit courses: $2 \times 3 \times 3 = 12$
B for 1 1-semester credit course: $1 \times 1 \times 3 = 3$

Specialized Accreditation - specialized accreditation normally applies to evaluation of programs, departments or schools that usually are parts of a total collegiate or other postsecondary institution. The unit accredited may be as large as college or a school within a university or as small as a curriculum within a discipline. Most of the specialized accrediting agencies review units within a postsecondary institution that is accredited by one of the regional accrediting commissions. However, certain of the specialized accrediting agencies do not accredit professional schools and other specialized or vocation or other postsecondary institutions that are freestanding in their operations. For example:
- Institution A’s College Algebra 101 for 3 semester credit hours may contain the same content as Institution B’s Freshman College Mathematics 1010 three semester credit hours course; but, the content may have been more difficult and more in alignment with Institution B’s Freshman College Mathematics 1011. In such an instance, transfer credit for Institution A’s College Algebra 101 would more likely granted/approved for Institution B’s Freshman College Mathematics 1010 three semester hours of credit only.

- Courses can be transferred downward in numerically assigned difficulty; but, they cannot be transferred upward in numerically assigned difficulty (ex. a 200/2000 level course may be considered in substitution for a 100/1000 level course but it may not be considered for transfer to the 300/3000 level).

- Clusters of courses may be created in order to equate to a receiving institution’s course.

- Honors Courses bearing 5 semesters hours of credit are normally only accepted in substitution for comparable content and difficulty level for a receiving institution’s three standard hours of course credit rather than two comparable courses bearing three semester credit hours each. Any exceptions to this practice are normally based upon ACT scores above an approved threshold.)
